Many conversations in my office begin with some form of the following:

“I don’t want to be my advisor” or “I would love to be my advisor, but my personal circumstances or vicissitudes of the academic job market require me to think about other options.” In both instances, that is typically followed by, “…but I have no idea where to begin.”

And most, even if she/he can conceive of an appealing, alternative professional career; feel unprepared and at a loss as to how to pursue it.

If this dilemma sounds the least bit familiar, join us and learn about how ImaginePhD, the first career exploration and strategy tool designed specifically for advanced degree holders in in the humanities and social sciences, can be used to organize and structure your search for satisfying post-academic career options in the private, nonprofit, or government sector.

This workshop will be led by Andrew Green, PhD who has more than 20 years of experience working with grad students, PhDs, and postdocs; and is currently the Associate Director for Graduate Students & PhDs for the UC Berkeley Career Center.

Please bring your laptop or tablet for this session. Pizza lunch served to those who register.
