Managing a Committee
12:00-1:30pm April 28\textsuperscript{th}  MU Garrison Room

Working with multiple advisors or committee members can be stressful, as interpersonal relationships become complicated and implicit and even conflicting expectations occur. At this workshop, participants will learn about the strategies to organize and manage a committee effectively. For graduate students who need to assemble a committee by themselves, this workshop will help them decide whom to invite and how to convey decisions to faculty members respectfully and gracefully. The workshop will also discuss how writing is utilized to set goals and expectations with multiple faculty members, and to negotiate your progress and the evaluation process of the progress with advisors. Useful tips will be offered to help participants make decisions when there are disagreements among different members of the committee.
